Attachment to 2004 LM-30 Report

In the 1970s, the leadership of Teamsters Union Local 381 (the local) felt that there was a need for a low-income residence in the Santa Maria area. They approached the federal government and negotiated a financial arrangement. It was part Urban Renewal and part Housing and Urban Development (HUD). In 1975, a HUD loan was signed and the project began. The local became the overseer of the Union Plaza apartment complex through the Union Plaza Corporation Board of Directors. The apartment complex is self-managed by the Union Plaza Corporation.

The Union Plaza Corporation bylaws require that the Board of Directors be made up of members of the local (three union members on the Board). The Corporation bylaws allow the principal officer of the local to be the principal officer of the Union Plaza Corporation. The local is financially responsible for the three-million-dollar loan that financed the project in 1975. The Union Plaza apartment complex pays the mortgage through a HUD loan, but, should they ever default, the local becomes responsible. The bylaws require that the money of the local be separate from the money of the Union Plaza Corporation. Both of these organizations have separate operations and bank accounts from the Union Plaza Apartments. Each of these organizations is a "not-for-profit" organization. The Union Plaza Corporation manages the apartment complex for the local. The employees of the apartment complex are covered under a collective bargaining agreement between the local and the Union Plaza Corporation.
